It is many years since we published a biographical sketch of the life of Bishop Bede Beekmeyer,* and the time seems opportune to say something about another eminent member of the same Church. Bishop Beekmeyer spent almost the whole of his life in the Kandy District. The subject of our sketch was himself born and educated in Kandy, and though he was called upon to fill several important appointments in the Diocese of Kandy, with marked credit to himself, he was yet able to indulge his bent for travel to the full, and visited many parts of the world which are only names to most of us.

Rev. Fr. Don John Marie Berenger was the third son and the fifth child of his parents. He was born in Kandy on the 18th October, 1873. His father was Edward James Berenger, whose name appears as a practising Proctor in 1864 along with that of Edwin Beven. Fr. Berenger's mother was Emelia Catherine Keyser, daughter of Bernard Gabriel Keyser, who held an important revenue appointment in the early days of British rule. She survived her husband 51 years and died in 1929 at the age of 82 years. It is probable that Keyser Street in the Pettah, one of the principal Burgher residential localities in times gone by, took its name from this family.

Father Berenger was educated at St. Benedict's College, Colombo, and later at St. Anthony's College, Kandy. After leaving the latter institution, where he showed much promise, he joined the Benedictine Order of Missionary Monks on the 15th December, 1889. Here, for the next four years, he continued at St. Anthony's Abbey his studies in the "Humanities" in Greek, Latin, and Rhetorics. In June 1893 he entered the Papal Seminary at Ampitiya, and for seven years more he prosecuted his studies in Philosophy, Theology, and Canon Law, under distinguished Jesuit Professors, one of whom was the eminent Rector of Louvain University, Belgium, Fr. A. Vandera. Here, too, Fr. Berenger was an outstanding student, being invariably at the top of his class, and was held in much regard by his professors. He was raised to the Sacerdotal Order of Priests on the 24th June, 1899, but continued his course of studies in Ecclesiastical History at the Papal Academy until April 1900. He had a distinguished career as a student, both at his own Benedictine Abbey as well as at the Papal Seminary, where for nearly eleven years after leaving College, he unflaggingly prosecuted his higher studies.

On leaving the Papal Academy in April 1900, Fr. Berenger was immediately appointed, without as usual having to serve as an Assistant for some time, full Parish Priest of the important Parish of Dimbula, comprising Talawakele, Lindula, Agrabatna, Punjabouy, right up to Nanu Oya. This area was the pioneer planting district at the time. The planters of those days were a very exclusive and privileged class as they were all to a man proprietary planters and not Company employers. They were all Public School and University educated but Fr. Berenger was treated with the greatest goodwill. He was admitted to all their various social and athletic clubs. There was hardly a function to which he was not invited. At a reception given by the Dimbula Planters in 1902 to the Duchess of Hesse, Father Berenger, the only Ceylonese invited, was specially presented to Her Royal Highness.

Father Berenger left the Dimbula Parish in 1905 after a fruitful labour of six years and was appointed to Badulla, having the entire Uva Province, with the exception of Bandarawela, in his charge. He remained here for 15 years. The District was at that time in a very backward state. The railway had not been opened and motor cars were unknown, the only means of transport being the double-bullock cart. Father Berenger had to visit his scattered flock on foot, traversing jungle paths infested with wild animals and the ubiquitous leech. Father Berenger was also Parish Priest at various times at Nuwara Eliya, Nawalapitiya and Bandarawela, and was finally appointed to the Kadugannawa-Galagedera District, where he worked for ten years.

At the age of fifty-six he entered on a new phase of his life and began to travel extensively in foreign parts. Journeying to America, he did parish work at Detroit, Michigan, for a few months, but finding the climatic conditions unsuitable, he returned to Ceylon on medical advice and took up duties once again in Kadugannawa-Galagedera. Wherever he was stationed, he left an indelible mark by building, renovating or enlarging Churches, Convents, Schools, etc., and introducing other improvements. He was instrumental in getting both the Good Shepherd Nuns and the Marist Christian Brothers to assist in the educational sphere for the first time in the Uva Province. He had the privilege of building the first Church in Ceylon dedicated to St. Therese of Lisieux, popularly known as "The Little Flower," who was canonised by Pope Pius XI. This beautiful Church in cut stone is situated on an eminence facing Peradeniya Junction, and is frequently visited by pilgrims.

But his trip to America by no means exhausts his travels. He has been to America three times round the world by three different routes and out of the island on six different occasions. His trips to America included Canada. One of the three trips to Canada was from Vancouver to Montreal, performed in mid-winter, right through the Canadian Rockies, a distance of nearly 3,500 miles, during the course of which he saw the wonderful glaciers and enormous ice-mountains—an unforgettable sight. He shot the St. Lawrence Rapids from Toronto up to Quebec—an exhilarating but awesome adventure. He was one of the first to go over the Niagara Falls, in a sort of cage, run as an electric funicular, which had then been recently introduced.

Father Berenger has had the rare experience of descending a coal mine 1600 feet in depth at Chicopee, U.S.A. and himself chipping off a bit of coal, which he still treasures. On this trip he partook of a homely meal in the bowels of the earth with the miners—in contrast with one he had in an inn in the highest hotel in the world, on the summit of Jungfrau in the Bernese Alps. Father Berenger has also had the somewhat singular experience of shearing sheep at a farm near Canberra and still retains the wool as a memento. Fishing on Loch Ness, Scotland, which came into prominence some years ago on account of a supposed monster to be seen in its waters, is among his other exploits.

The ruins of ancient cities are among the other sights seen by Father Berenger in the course of his extensive travels. The Acropolis, the oldest known historical monument in the world; the Steppes Pyramid, five miles in the desert from Heliopolis; the ruins at Damascus and also those of Baalbek in the ancient city of Baal, the sun god, about 35 miles from Damascus; the ruins outside Damascus; the granite pillar in Syria, said to be the largest column in the world hewn out of one single block—these are some of the other famous sights he has seen. He has visited the ruins of ancient Rome, such as the Colosseum, and the various forums of Pompeii and Herculaneum. He twice ascended Mt. Vesuvius, on the second occasion when the volcano was in slight eruption. He visited the Acropolis in Athens and was much impressed by the majestic ruins still in good preservation of the Parthenon, the Erechtheum, and the temple of Nike Apteros. But notwithstanding all this, Father Berenger gives pride of place to our own magnificent ruins in Ceylon—those especially of Anuradhapura and Polonnaruwa.

In his day Father Berenger displayed a strong penchant for climbing and may be said to have ascended every known monument in the world. He has been to the top of the Woolrick Building in New York containing nearly a hundred storeys, the observation-tower of which surmounts the clouds; he has climbed the Eiffel Tower in Paris; Scotts monument in Edinburgh and that of Robert Burns on Caldon Hill; the Leaning Tower of Pisa in Italy, and the renowned Belfry in Bruges, Belgium, the chime of its bells being referred to by Longfellow in the following couplet—
"Loud at times and low at times,
And changing like a poet's rhymes."

Father Berenger has performed other unusual feats. He has been inside the arm of the Statue of Liberty (now prohibited) at the entrance to New York harbour; also the hollow body of the largest image of Buddha in the world, known as the Kamakura Buddha in Japan; and most thrilling of all, he has entered the ball on which the image of Buddha in the world, known as the Kamakura Buddha in Japan, has been fixed the Gross on the very summit of the Cupola on the dome of St. Peter's Basilica in Rome.

Father Berenger has at various times visited most of the Catholic religious sanctuaries in the world. He has been twice to Lourdes and twice to Lisieux. He has visited St. Anne de Beannpré, near Quebec; the Holy House in Loreto in Italy; Walsingham near Cambridge, St. Francis Assisi in Central Italy; St. Mark's at Venice; St. John Nappomochene in Prague, and last but not least Father Berenger visited St. Anthony's Shrine at Padua in Northern Italy—the last mentioned place no fewer than four times between 1908 and 1939.

But it is not only famous places that Father Berenger has visited. He has seen, met, and conversed with men of world-wide reputation, among them King George VI. and Queen Elizabeth the two Royal Princesses; the Duke of Windsor; the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester; the Emperor of Austria, Franz Joseph; the Emperor of Germany, Kaiser Wilhelm II; the Crown Prince; Archdeacon Francis Ferdinand of Austria, whose assassination in Sarajevo was the cause of World War I; the present Emperor of Japan, Hirohito; on the very day he was proclaimed Crown Prince of Japan 1919. President Woodrow Wilson speaking in the Capitol at Washington; President Hoover; and Thomas Alva Edison. He was received in private audience in Dublin by Eamon de Valera and saw Neville Chamberlain and Lord Halifax when they went to Borneo to meet Signor Mussolini. He visited the House of Lords when it was in session; and was present in the House of Commons to hear a spirited debate between Neville Chamberlain and Lloyd George.

No less noteworthy are Father Berenger's achievements on the spiritual side. Father Berenger has seen, met and spoken to four consecutive Popes—one may say six—Pope Pius X in 1908; Benedict XV in 1919; Pius XI, once in 1929 and a second time on 2nd February, 1939, only ten days before this aged Pontiff's death. He was present at the magnificent obsequies of this Pontiff. Finally, Father Berenger was in Rome during the Election and Coronation of the present Pope Pius XII, whom he also knew when the latter was Cardinal Chamberlain to his predecessor Pope Pius XI. At the solemn obsequies of Pius XI and at the brilliant Coronation ceremonies of Pius XII, the reigning Pontiff, Father Berenger had reserved seats, which enabled him to view the proceedings with comfort among such a vast gathering which crowded the great Basilica of St. Peter's.

This sketch of Father Berenger's life may give the impression that he was one who was fully absorbed in spiritual things to the exclusion of mundane matters. This is far from being the case. He is very fond of outdoor sports and indoor games. He has witnessed many a game of cricket at Lord's and other grounds. He has seen the boat race between Oxford and Cambridge, and was present at the Derby in 1939, when Blue Peter won this notable race, almost in a canter. He is a good Bridge player and excels at Chess. His Chief hobbies, apart from books, of which he has a good collection, are stamps, of which he has some rare Papal States and penny issues, and match-box labels running into thousands. He is a keen numismatist, and in this field too his collection is a notable one. The coin he prizes most is a Kruger Sovereign, which he purchased himself from General de Oliveira in 1901 when he was in Ceylon; also a gold coin of Napoleon I, minted when he was only First Consul of France and not yet Emperor. This is a very rare coin.

Father Berenger is no mean linguist. Besides English, in which he is a facile writer and a fluent easy speaker, he reads, speaks, writes and preaches in Sinhalese, Tamil, and the local Portuguese patois. He speaks Latin fluently, as well as Italian, French and German. He is familiar with Esperanto, and is the only Fellow in Ceylon of the British Esperanto Association, to which body he was elected in 1915. As a world traveller, with friends scattered over all parts of the globe, Father Berenger finds Esperanto to be the only means of keeping in touch with them by correspondence. Other institutions to which he belongs are the Royal Empire Society, London, of which he is a Life Fellow, and also of the Local Branch in Ceylon; an Associate Member of the Society Internationale de Philologie Sciences at Beaux Arts, and a member of the Pelman Institute.

A life marked by so much travel must have its adventurous side, and Father Berenger has at least one stirring incident to relate. After travelling in Egypt, Palestine, Judea, Lebanon, and Syria, he embarked on a cargo-passenger boat at Alexandria, the Northern part of Syria, bound for Genoa. In the course of this voyage the boat ran aground on a sandbank and remained there for five days, despite all efforts to refloat her. At the end of this period, to quote Father Berenger, "the ship of its own accord gracefully extricated herself and took to the open sea as if nothing had happened." It should be mentioned that one circumstance that contributed to make Father Berenger's travels a pleasing experience was that he was a good sailor and hardly ever knew the terrors of sea-sickness.

In June 1949 Father Berenger celebrated his Golden Jubilee of Priesthood with much éclat at the Hill capital where he was born 75 years earlier. He was, if not the first Ceylonese, certainly the first Dutch Burgher, to do so. His relations, friends, and well-wishers gathered around him, and the many religious and social functions organised by them passed off very well. On this auspicious occasion, Father Berenger received a personal message and a special blessing from His Holiness the Pope, at whose election and coronation, as has already been seen, Father Berenger was present in 19.

The following estimate of Father Berenger's character, written by one who knew him well, is a fair description of his exploits—"Father Berenger believes and puts into practice the axiom that Travel is a part of Education. We have known him pack his trunks suddenly and embark on a world tour, and while we were hardly aware that he had left these shores, and were looking for him in the Indian Ocean, he had already crossed the Antipodes, knelt at the feet of Our Sovereign Pontiff, and passed the threshold of the New World. His excursions have embraced nearly every quarter of the world. He has been where the sun is said, poetically, to emerge from the eastern gates and where in fiery glory it dips behind the western hills... If geographers could assure Father Berenger that even the frigid Antarctic will repay a visit, we have no doubt that that remote part of the Globe too will be included in his peregrinations."

Having reached the age of 75 years and lived a life full of good deeds and usefulness, Father Berenger decided two years ago, owing to ill-health, to retire from active work and to undertake light duties. He therefore retired to the little Church at St. Joseph's at Halloluwa, two miles from Kandy, on the banks of the Mahaweli Ganga, which he has renovated and improved. Here he spends the sunset of his life ministering to the spiritual needs of a dozen Catholic families. He has built a little cottage for himself, the best room in which is used as a library, well-stocked with books treating on nearly every subject, for Fr. Berenger believes, with Carlyle, that "the modern university is a university of books." We will conclude this inadequate sketch of a great figure in the Church of Rome by quoting his own words:—"There is no education so fruitful as mixing and mingling and interchanging ideas and thoughts with peoples and nations in all strata of life, giving of your own and receiving from others."

One final word. Father Berenger, a loyal member of the Union, who has travelled far and wide, thinks, as others have done before him, that there is no place to compare with Ceylon, and he expresses this view in the homely words of the poet:

"Where'er I roam, whatever realms I see,
My heart untravelled, fondly turns to thee.

J. R. T.
in the world. And yet how many of us recklessly fling health away. Many girls in mad moods or fits of temper do rash things in a moment, which mean months of misery to themselves and others. We are responsible for the pampering or wasting of health by drugs or stimulants which some women think harmless; for all self-made misery and hysteria which make others miserable as well as ourselves.

We are responsible for our faults. We have no right to shift them or attempt to shift them on others, to plead heredity, circumstances, &c. Our faults are our own and we must correct them.

We are responsible for our duty to our neighbours. Upon the well-doing of each depends the well-being of all. Have you ever noticed anybody imitating you, or caught yourself adopting the style and manner of a friend? Either observation shows you in a moment how dependent we are on one another, and how much there is of good or evil in life, which we either help or hinder by our examples. We can make ourselves a force for good or evil to our neighbours by the influence of the lives we lead. Therein lies our responsibilities towards them. We do not make the circumstances, but we are responsible for the attitude with which we meet them.

Our personal characters can do much to make women respected. You, who are still maidens, are given the opportunity to bring up the standard of women’s influence and to acquire a due sense of your responsibilities as women. The girl who makes goodness attractive may be said to have achieved something in her day and generation.

(II) How to Keep Servants.

The servant problem is always with us, and our children and grand-children will have to grapple with it in knottier forms than we have to, at the present day. Domestic service seems somehow to have fallen into disrepute, and the servant class of today prefers to earn a living by some form of employment which carries more of independence with it.

Domestic service is decidedly more comfortable, but less well-paid, and women as well as men prefer to be employed in factories, shops, plumbago sheds, &c. You, after their stated hours of work are over, they can call their time their own instead of being at the beck and call of an exacting master or mistress, as is often the case when in domestic service.

The class of servants obtainable today is so unreliable, and most people seem to be so unfortunate in this respect and have so much trouble over them, that it seems to obsess their minds to the exclusion of all other interests. It is quite a common thing to hear the “servant trouble” discussed whenever two or three women are gathered together, each reciting her own woeful experiences, which seem worse than the other’s.

Some women seems to be utterly incapable of keeping their servants and one constantly sees new faces among their domestics, who seem to go as fast as they come, while that house acquires a “bad reputation for servants” in the locality, and eventually they find it very difficult to induce anyone to take service with them. The reason seems hard to find, as the family is small, the wages fair, and duties reasonable, but the exodus continues and each new servant is engaged only to leave within a few weeks.

While, on the contrary, houses in which there are a larger number of inmates and the work consequently heavier, while the wages are the same, seem to possess the secret of inducing their servants to remain with them year after year.

After a consideration of the question from various points of view, I have come to the conclusion that much depends on the personality of the mistress of the house. If she has sympathy with her servants and tact, I think it goes a great way in her management of them. Some women give an unpleasant order to a servant in a tone which instantly arouses feelings of resentment and gains only sullen obedience, while others give the same order in such a pleasant manner that it removes the feeling that there is anything derogatory in it, and the order is obeyed with such cheerful alacrity that it is surprising.

It is also a fatal mistake to be constantly scolding servants, as some women have a habit of doing. It only makes them rebellious, discontented and sulky. At their best, servants are but human and as liable to have their faults and make mistakes as ourselves. A grave rebuke moderately uttered carries far more weight than hours of hysterical scolding, and nagging. Others make their servants dishonest and unreliable by continually trusting them. The result is that in spite of all their precautions they are robbed and cheated in a manner never experienced by their more easy-going and confiding neighbour who makes her servants understand that she trusts them, and depends on their honesty, giving them opportunities of proving it.

As regards breakages—those daily tragedies of the housekeeper—it requires stern self-control to keep your temper when it is, as most often happens, the result of obvious carelessness, but here, too, scolding is most ineffectual and demoralizing. A warning for the first offence and a system of graduated and reasonable fines are more effective.
Another rule that will promote the smooth working of the domestic wheels is never interfere in servants’ quarrels, or take sides in their differences. Let them settle it amongst themselves.

Since the chief drawback in domestic service from a servant’s point of view seems to be lack of liberty, I think we might try to make it more attractive for them, by letting them have more time to call their own after they complete the regular round of daily duties; time which they can spend in attending to their own sewing, their own little business affairs, or in visiting their relations or friends. Some mistresses and masters, too, treat their servants as if they are mere machines for working. They seem to think that a servant’s life ought to be one perpetual round of duties. If they have done all their daily duties, some other work must be found for them to do, they must never rest, never feel tired! Needless to say these are the people who are always in trouble regarding servants—they can never keep them and—they are mildly surprised or even indignant over it!

During my experience of house-keeping for more years than I care to count, I have been one of the fortunate people who do not know what the servant trouble is from personal experience, hence my sympathy for my less favoured sisters. I hope the hints I have endeavoured to give in the foregoing remarks, as the fruits of my own practical experience, will be of use to some of them, and will help to solve the servant problem to some extent.

We must try to remember that our servants are mortals just like ourselves, with the same longings for happiness, kindness, amusement, variety that we all have, of whatever class, colour or creed.
THE JOURNAL OF THE

single, supreme, Almighty God, All-Vater or All-Father. "This Divinity" says Motley, "was too sublime to be incarnated or imaged, too infinite to be enclosed in temples built with hands. Certain forests were consecrated to the unseen God, whom the eye of reverent faith could alone behold. Thither at stated times, the people repaired to worship." But this pure and simple faith later became corrupted by contact with their Celtic neighbours and by the intermixture of Roman mythology.

Early missionary efforts to convert the Frisian met with little success. Missionaries from the Culdee Church of Iona and from Britain laboured here, prominent among them being Willibord. The Franks who had become Christians waged war against them and taking possession of Utrecht founded the first Christian Church there. Pepin drove the Frisian chief Radbad into submission and almost even into Christianity. It was this Frisian chief "who turned back from the very threshold of the baptismal font, preferring the society and usages of his dead ancestors in Woden's halls to those of these new Christians, even in their happier heavens."

His son who succeeded did not actively oppose the introduction of Christianity though he himself refused to be converted. He rebelled against the Franks, and was defeated in a battle in which he perished with a vast number of Frisians. Motley states "the Christian dispensation thus enforced was now accepted by these northern pagans. By the middle of the 8th century, some hundred thousand Frisians had been slaughtered, and as many more converted. The hammer which smote the Saracens at Towes was at last successful in beating the Netherlander into Christianity." They revolted under Charlemagne. They yielded at last only on the assurance that they would be governed according to their own laws and that none of their native usages would be disturbed and with the stipulation still on record that "The Frisians shall be free as long as the wind blows out of the clouds and the world stands."

Ditchfield states "They would recognise no authority but that of their own national judges who were elected by the voice of the people assembled beneath the trees of Upstal, "their natural Council Chamber. In ecclesiastical matters they preserved their ideas of freedom. They would accept no law for the compulsory payment of tithe; they compelled their clergy to marry on the principles that if a man has no wife he will seek the wife of another; nor would they accept any ecclesiastical decree unless it was passed by layman as well as clergy."

"The same disposition that made the Netherlanders the most rebellious of slaves and the most stubborn of pagans, has made them and their descendants from that day to this, the staunchest defenders of civil and religious liberty, and the most uncompromising adherents of the principles, doctrines, customs and usages inherited from their fathers." Who can deny the truth of this statement?

NOTES.—(1) The Venerable George Justus Schrader, L.L.D. referred to in III, 1, was Chaplain of Pussellawa, 1859-1861, and of Galle, 1861-1875, where he was instrumental in building All Saints’ Church, the finest ecclesiastical edifice of the Anglican Church in Ceylon, now the Church of Ceylon. He was a good preacher and much respected. The family derives from Justus Schrader of Brunswick, who settled in Ceylon about 1710, and married at Jaffna, Christina Roeloffs. (D.B.U. Journal, Vol. VI, page 69.)

(2) On retirement from Government Service, Edward Wilford Arndt, referred to in XII, left Ceylon with his family, for Australia and settled in Perth, where he continued to practise his profession.

(3) Hendrikus Georgius de Rooy, referred to in the same section, was a Boer prisoner-of-war, and was interned in Ceylon. He held the rank of Lieutenant. On the cessation of war, he took out papers under the Naturalization Ordinance, secured Employment in the Ceylon Government Railway, and retired after many years of service. He married in St. Mary’s Cathedral in Jaffna, 27th August 1902, Mary Helen Strautenberg, born at Jaffna 18th April 1880, died at Colombo, 19th April 1945. She was a daughter of Charles Alphonse Strautenberg, Proctor, born at Jaffna, 20th November 1833, died at Kandy, 8th September 1909, married in St. Mary’s Cathedral in Jaffna, 27th June 1861, Mary Louisa Jan, born 22nd May 1816, died at Jaffna, 3rd November 1907.

DUTCH BURGHER UNION

"OLD JOE."

In the early days of commercial life in the East, when the pagoda tree flourished in Ceylon ready to be shaken by any resolute hand, "Old Joe" reigned supreme in Colombo Bachelors' society, as the King of Good Fellows—the Lord of conviviality. The smallness of the unofficial circle in those primitive times, was fully compensated for by the extent of its hospitality. No strangers of any respectability, no commanders of any of the few ships which frequented our port, were allowed to take refuge in the dreary wastes of the Government Rest House—a sombre, low-roofed building, which occupied the site of the present Telegraph Offices. There was a hearty welcome; a cordial greeting, under the roof of each one of the mercantile community, with detached rooms in the rear of their houses for bachelors, and hot tiffin at the offices in the fort, that could at any time be made to do duty for a hearty dinner.

The subject of this notice was the head, and, I might add, the body of a commercial firm of good position; the other partner constituted the legs, running about in all possible directions, touting for business, and, it was whispered, not particular as to how he obtained it. "Joe" was the impersonation of honor: Donald was supposed to have been, if not the inventor, at any rate, the most diligent professor of the philosophic maxim, "Make money, honestly if you can, but make money." So completely were they the representatives of opposites, that no one would have believed they could have continued long together as partners in business; nor would they but that each was content to let the other "gang his air gait." Had Donald's name been Phelim or Rory, you would still have felt persuaded he was from north of the Tweed, whilst on the other hand nobody could undertake to affirm, and indeed, nobody cared whether Joe had been born north or south of the border-country.

In business matters Donald was the touter, Joe was the surveyor. What one angled for and landed, the other preserved, and usually, with consummate good humour and unbroken faith. How often was the senior hurt and vexed by the promises of his junior, how difficult of realisation: how coarsely savage was the other with the scrupulous exactitude with which every business stipulation was more than fulfilled in the spirit, if not in the letter. Donald was the ogre, the evil genius of the office: from dewy morn to sultry eve his chief aim appeared to be to make every wretched subordinate still more wretched than he was, by fault-finding, by fining, by storming; in fact, by every conceivable mode of worrying. It was joyous and thrilling to hear the sound "ship-in-sight," from the flag-staff orderly, as he peeped into the ogre's den; for all knew they would be free from their tormentor for that day, and perhaps, the following. Thrusting the huge broad-brimmed, whitey-brown fluffy beaver on his uncombed shaggy, head; snatching up his ponderous white cotton umbrella, and grasping in one hand a long tin case of estate plans, he made rapidly for the wharf, and slipping into the first canoe, ordered the boatman to pull off to the strange ship, the first to board her in the hope of catching a constituent or two in want of a fine block of land in an accessible, salubrious and picturesque district, of which his firm always had a number on hand, ready surveyed, with the boundaries and bridle-paths cut.

The whole establishment, from the Dutch book-keeper down to the Tamil office sweeper and errand boy, breathed more freely; and nothing in this sublunary sphere would have caused them collectively and individually more heartfelt satisfaction than for a gale of wind to have sprung up and carried a particular canoe round the Island as far as the Great Basses, or, for the matter of that, to Trincomalee.

The book-keeper strolled into the cool, inner office, where was seated old Joe in loose attire, his shirt front flung wide open, with two or three letters upon his desk waiting replies at a convenient season. The burly chief treated his head clerk as a trusted, faithful servant, and did not scruple to consult him on many a knotty point in native dealings or European commerce. The office-boy, no longer awed by Donald's presence, peeped in at the sanctum door, revelled for a few moments in the refulgence of the great presence within, and then stepped to the back verandah, where he listened to stories from the one-eyed bottle-washer who was preparing for racking off three whole casks of Hodgson and Abbot's pale ale.

Four o'clock was the signal for closing up the heavy work of the day, and preparing for the outgoing tappal; for at that date, there was but a mail coach to Kandy on each alternate day, and none other. At the half hour, neighbours looked in; York Street came round the corner, King Street looked up the Chief of Prince Street, and there being no Chamber of Commerce, old Joe's was the established house of call for most of the mercantile community without families to take them home. But how compact that body; seven firms, three of them with married partners, left about half a large number of the "Rifles" were present, more especially, when Jock and a well-remembered theatrical member of the Bar were there, the festive board had attractions superior to the whist table, and songs, nay, even dances, formed the staple of the nocturnal revels. I may here mention the fact that "Old Joe" though burly in person, was nimble of foot, and a most graceful dancer, despite his bulk. Many a time and oft, towards the small hours of the morning, the ponderous old Dutch table at whist bungalow would be cleared of all bottles and glass, and "Joe" being called upon kicking off his shoes would dance one of his favourite Highland dances, a reel, or fling whatever it might chance to be, on the well polished surface.

At this same bungalow there were on Sundays, meetings of what were known as the Beef Steak Club, the members of which composed of merchants, military officers, and civil servants, met there to discuss the best beef-steaks that could be procured, and the ripest of country-bottled ale from the only recognised brewhery of those days—Hodgson and Abbot's. It was in connection with one of these Sunday afternoon parties elongated well into evening hours, that a characteristic story is related of Jock Anderson.
Brave as a lion, the major was docile as a lamb towards the juniors of his regiment, who he appeared to regard as his special protégés.
One of the senior lieutenants but recently arrived from Europe, had a turn for bullying and on one occasion went so far with his insolence towards one of the young subs present, that it became evident the new-comer was bent on a quarrel. Seeing this, Jock Anderson rose and tapping the irrepressible lieutenant on the shoulder, beckoned him to follow into the verandah. There, in a few blunt words, the major gave the other a piece of his mind.
"They were there as the guests of the merchants, and the harmony of the evening must not and should not be disturbed. It was evident lieutenant so-and-so wished to provoke a duel, but he, the major never allowed "his boys" to go out, he always acted for them, and on the present occasion, by—dash—he would be found ready the next morning at gun-fire to put a bullet through any part of the lieutenant's body he choose to name.—and by—dash—he'd do it too."—It is scarcely necessary to add that the major's reputation as a shot was such that the quarrelsome party subsided, and slunk back to the table, a subdued and peaceful man.
This "Day of Remembrance," was commemorated as usual on the 21st of October by a goodly complement of members who foregathered at the Union Hall. It is always a difficult matter to settle details when a programme has to be drawn up to meet a special occasion such as this. Whatever else this year's proceedings may be recalled for, it will not include any "tracasseries or grievances.

A special feature of the proceedings was a short address delivered by Mrs. Denzil Koch, daughter of Mr. R. G. Anthonisz, the Founder. Her words set forth the Union and its objects on a very intimate note, and in the light of a legacy by one whose ideal was—"SERVICE TO THE COMMUNITY." She said:—

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen,

I have very mixed feelings today, sad, and at the same time proud and happy. Sad that my father has not lived to see the fruit of his labour, when all his pioneer work has reached such complete fulfilment. Proud and happy to know, that although his loyal supporters—some of whom were his contemporaries, and many of whom have passed on, that their spirit still lives in their children, and God willing this torch will be carried on from Generation to Generation.

The word 'Founder,' is one who originates or organizes. My father, dear friends, did both—though it is not my place to say it. He nobly originated the Union. There was nothing to keep the Dutch Burghers together, they had only memories and recollections of the past, to which they clung. Nothing to remind them of their noble heritage and ancestry. So, in 1899 a few of those interested formed a Society, and called it “Het Hollandsch Gidschap van Ceylon.” “The Dutch Fellowship of Ceylon.” They used to meet together—just a handful of them at first, weekly in my father's study. After the lapse of some years, a Dutch writer, Mr. Maurits Wagenvoort visited the Island in 1907 and this gave my father an opportunity of further discussing his ideals with him, with the result, that his life long ambition was realized, and the Dutch Burgher Union took shape, and was inaugurated in January 1908, and has been in existence for forty-two years. My father was determined from the very outset, that it should not be a political body, but a Union which would bring the people together, regardless of any class distinctions, and so keep up the traditions of the race, and the good old customs which were fast dying out. In Dr. Prins he had a very loyal supporter.

The work of organization thus begun, fell heavily on their shoulders. They had a few other loyal supporters. My father and Dr. Prins were joint Secretaries at the time. No new organization or venture escapes criticism and opposition, and what these pioneers had to fight against, the taunts, sneers, ridicule and false accusations, would take me too long to tell you here. Suffice it to say that they bravely persevered, his loyal supporters and he, and after my father had firmly secured the position of the Union, and all the spade work had been completed, he agreed to be President, which as we know is the highest honour the Union can offer any of its members. He had served them well and faithfully and they were proud to have him as their President, which office he held for sixteen years, up to the time of his death. There were so many beautiful and eloquent tributes paid to him, by his loyal friends, that I cannot resist the temptation of quoting a few:—

"He lived in a great past, which has a glorious present in this Island and it is he who opened out to us the pages of our history."

"Mr. Anthonisz worked for the Dutch Burgher Union, and gave them a place under the Sun. It today the Dutch Burghers are held in high esteem amongst the various communities that lived in the Island, they owe it all to Mr. Anthonisz who conceived and founded the Dutch Burgher Union."

"He was the Founder of the Dutch Burgher Union. He taught us to cherish an interest and a pride in our great past, realizing how powerful an impulse the privilege of Noblesse Oblige, exerts on the lives of men."

"Mr. Anthonisz was never a rash adventurer in the realms of history. All his writings bear the hallmark of scrupulous accuracy, and any record which is supported by his name bears an unquestioned guarantee. His reputation stands high among the historical and research Scholars of Holland."

Another ideal of my father's was the furthering of the Dutch Language. He was very keen on this, for it was a language he had learnt, seated at his grandfather's knee, at a very early age; committing Dutch phrases to memory and repeating them to him. He was then taught questions and answers, and it gave his grandfather great delight, to hear him pronounce these Dutch sentences so correctly. Everything Dutch appealed to my father, music, language, customs, modes of living etc. In the days of my girlhood a Dutch class was formed, where a number of us used to meet, and a labour over the Dutch Grammar and Conversation. He also had hopes of a Kindergarten Class for the little ones, but it never materialized. My one regret is, and I am sure you share it too, that his second Volume of the "Dutch in Ceylon" could not have been published. His notes which were numerous, scattered, and very often dis-connected could not be put together. So this valuable storehouse of information like a hidden treasure lies buried with him, with the mind that conceived it.

It is a great heritage we have dear friends, the heritage of a noble ancestry handed down from father to son. Our numbers may be few but our strength according to the motto of the Union "En-draacht maakt macht," should endure. Curiously enough this is the first time I have attended a Founder's Day as I have been seventeen years away in Australia, and expect to go back there again next month. Our home is there now, but it is difficult to eradicate the roots of half a century or more, and my thoughts and wishes will always follow the work of the Dutch Burgher Union in Ceylon. For the sake of our children, the coming generation, let us be proud of our noble heritage, proud that we can claim as our ancestors those brave men, who, at one time were rulers of parts of this Island. Loyal to the Union which binds us together. A Union which has been tended and nursed from its infancy, step by step, by a man who held the welfare of his Community so much at heart and that man, the Founder, my father.

Let us then work together in a strong band of Unity true to the best that is in us, not forgetting at the same time, the Country we live in just now, where many have received kindnesses and formed firm friendships. Finally, this gesture to perpetuate my Father's memory as you are doing today, and have done all these years, is very commendable, and I thank you. I shall now end, with a favourite quotation of my father's.

"Time the ruthless idol breaker
Smileless, cold iconoclast
Though he rob us of our altars Cannot rob us of the past."

1. Colonel A. C. B. Jonklaas

Colonel Algernon Clarence Byrde Jonklaas who died recently at the age of seventy-four, was the elder of the two sons of F. A. Jonklaas, Accountant and Proprietor of Irene Estate, Peradeniya. His surviving younger brother is E. G. Jonklaas, the well-known Crown Proctor of Gampola. Few indeed as they pass Peradeniya by car, are able to locate "Irene Estate," the home of the family! The golf-course, which at one time was a race-course, and several residential bungalows have replaced the cocoa groves and coffee. "Irene House," however, still stands, fronting the road to Kandy unrecognised in its new facade. Having served once upon a time as the School of Agriculture, it now is a Seed Store of the Agricultural Department.

It was in this old home that A. C. B. Jonklaas, known for short as "Byrdie" or "Curly" depending on the measure of intimacy of his friends, spent the years of his boyhood and youth. He was an old boy of Kingswood, one of the eleven pupils present on the day that the school was opened. None would dare dispute his loyalty to his old school, or to the Founder—that venerable "drummer" who marched him along a stretch of Time's unending road.

In the late nineties, A. C. B. entered on his professional studies at the Technical College, to qualify eventually for appointment in the P.W.D. Later years were to prove him as one of that band of road-makers and bridge-builders, who with "sweat and tears," and bullock drawn rollers, founded that network of roads which today evokes the praise of many visitors to this land.

Retiring in 1936 from the Government Service, in which he had risen to the staff-post of Provincial Engineer, this most genial and generous of men settled down on his property at Jaltara, "Erin's Land," a little way out of Colombo. Here, he spent his declining years nursing his passion for rifle and fowling-piece, and his fondness for dogs and animals. Many were the thrilling tales he could have told of sport in the back-blocks where his work lay—many of them unopened voids where the elephant, the deer, the bear and the wild-boar roamed, knowing no roads but the run-ways of their own making.

His record as a "volunteer" of the Ceylon Light Infantry and as an officer of that military unit, which he rose to command from 1923 to 1927, was one packed with unflagging enthusiasm. His many older contemporaries who inspired this passion as a soldier, have nearly all gone before him to the echo of those three last volleys, and to that bugle call thrilling to the broken note of the Last Post, and the Reveille. From that host it is possible to pick out a few names—Arthur Bartholomew and "Dicky" Brohier, Jim Van Langenberg and Van Cuylenberg (Junior), the Jayawardenas and Dep, Ohlms and Modder. An admirer, writing of A. C. B. says: "I feel sure he would like to know that he is remembered as a "volunteer," than whom there was none better or keener in all the years we knew him. With him, volunteer­ing was an obsession. In his last years, he would delight to talk of the good old days in khaki, when he was the liveliest of live wires, a very bundle of nervous energy and sparkling efficiency. Sparedly built, with not an ounce of superfluous flesh on him, A. C. B. could outlast and outmarch the youngest and cockiest rookie among his officers."

Colonel Jonklaas was an old member of the Dutch Burgher Union, and in his time, contributed largely to the Union's social activities. In one memorable instance he precipitously stepped in to fill the gap, and published a notice in the local papers that a dance would take place in the Union Hall on New Year's Eve.

On the day of the event when preparations were in full swing, the small impromptu committee helping him stood aghast, while a battle royal was being waged between the self-constituted dance secretary, and the august Secretary of the Union. "You had no right," the latter thundered to publish notice of the dance without my authority. The dance shall not take place!"

"On with the dance!" said the Colonel. "It will take place if I have to call out the C.I.I., to keep you out!"

"If that be so," said the Secretary "I shall call out the Police Force to see both you and the C.I.I. off!"

Happily, the Colonel commanding the C.I.I., and the Deputy Inspector General of Police (now in retirement), were both at heart great sportsmen of whom the Victorian era was so prolific. Eventually, shaking hands on it, they provided the members of the D.B.U. with one of the New Year dances, most memorable for good comradeship, and good fun.

Naturally it is left to those who knew him best and loved him well, to miss him most. He leaves five daughters and three sons-in-law, all too well known in Union circles to need naming. His wife, Harriet Agnes Celia Drieberg, predeceased him. She died at Ratnapura, on the 24th of August, 1920.

2. Jessie Alexandra Maria van der Straaten.

The recent death of Mrs. E. A. van der Straaten at the age of 76 years after a long illness, leaves another gap in that fast dwindling company of original members of the Dutch Burgher Union. She zealously assisted her husband in the cause of the Union, and her death is a real loss to the community. Quiet, modest, of a retiring disposition, she was at the same time, in her day, a hard and earnest worker in the interests of the Union.

Mrs. van der Straaten was the second of the three daughters of William Wright Beling, and his wife Maria Elizabeth Prins. She had five brothers, H. P. and W. W. Beling both leading members of the community, and Leopold Charles who with his brothers Christopher and Aelian were citizens of America. All her brothers except the last mentioned have predeceased her. Of her sisters, Mrs. Walter Schokman survives her. The other was the wife of the late Dr. Colvin van Geyzel.

Held in the highest regard by all classes of Colombo's society she kept her home a happy and wholesome one, while she was herself a naturally charming hostess.

3. Sir Francis Soertsz, K.C.

Sir Francis Soertsz, able judge and lucid exponent of legal principles, who died early in January, has left a void in the Burgher Community which will not be easily filled.

Born on March 14, 1886, he entered St. Joseph's College, Colombo, as one of its first pupils and after a brilliant career there, joined the Law College in 1908. He passed out as an advocate and after a short period of practice proceeded to England, where he was called to the Bar at Gray's Inn.

On his return to Ceylon, he practised for a short time as a Crown Counsel, and then migrated to Galle to become the leader of the Bar there. On the advice of friends, he later returned to Colombo to build up a lucrative practice.

In 1936 he was appointed a Puisne Judge, and acted on several occasions as Chief Justice. Retiring from the Bench in 1948, he placed his brilliant intellect and culture at the Country's disposal by accepting the professorship of The Faculty of Law in the University of Ceylon. He was Knighted in 1947.

Sir Francis himself, brilliant speaker and writer as he was with a rare charm of literary setting, was the most unassuming and open-hearted of men. He was the soul of generosity and fond of entertaining—not from swagger, but from love of seeing people enjoy themselves.

Sir Francis was held in high esteem as a member of the Catholic Church in Ceylon, and was a recipient of the high Papal honour of a Knight Commander of St. Gregory.

The Story of Our Surveys

Under the title "Lands, Maps and Surveys", Mr. R. L. Brohier is producing another valuable contribution to the knowledge of Ceylon's past, and what is scarcely less valuable—to the popularisation of that knowledge. The occasion it commemorates is the 150th anniversary of the establishment of the Survey Department in whose service Mr. Brohier has just completed so distinguished a career. But the work itself, of which the First volume only* has yet appeared, is very much more than a commemorative volume, or even a history of the Department. Its topic naturally invites comparison with such useful accounts as G. K. Pippet's History of the Ceylon Police or G. F. Perera's The Ceylon Railway, and P. M. Bingham's very full history of the Public Works Department, that mighty off shoot of the Survey; but the title rightly indicates that its scope is rather wider, and, what is more important, the entire treatment turns outwards more and seeks at every stage to relate the undertakings and achievements of the department to the needs and interests of the wider society it served.

In his Preface the author tells how the project first entered his mind:

"In the process of gathering information for my publications on the Ancient Irrigation Works of Ceylon, my researches introduced me to the old correspondence files in the Survey Office at Colombo and the Trigonometrical Office at Diyatalawa. White ant, mould and the cruel climate have unfortunately claimed toll of many an interesting folio, while mis-directed enthusiasm for ridding the record room of lumber on the introduction of a new office system within the past quarter century has sadly depleted the volumes of reports and diaries many of which would have provided valuable and readable data."

In the course of his narrative he reminds the reader of other such examples of neglect and misguided zeal for shelf space on the part of custodians of records. The rescue Mr. Brohier planned, however, was not one of mere preservation of what remained, nor even selection and condensation, which might have resulted only in a leaner volume occupying less space on several readers' shelves. Instead he made it his aim to write a book "intelligible to readers with no special scientific knowledge," and in doing so he recognised fully the need to make his tale complete "by focussing its features" and "bringing them into perspective in proper historical settings."

The complete success could not, in the very nature of the case, be achieved, he well understood. In result the reviewer, who for all purposes is a general reader in relation to this work, finds that there are two aspects, instead of one, on which he is quite unqualified to comment.

There is on the one hand the essential technical aspect, where the author deals with methods of surveying and map-production. All the reviewer can pretend to have gained from it is some inkling of the variety of the methods and instruments a surveyor needs to use in order to obtain his results, and the influence of terrain in determining his selection. More fascinated, perhaps, but no wiser is he by his reading of triumphs and disasters in the processes of Map-production: the difficulties attending the registration of colour prints, and the propensity of paper to distortion in the warm humid climate of Colombo. But, quite apart from the confidence inspired by the author's antecedents in the profession, the warm tributes paid by technically competent reviewers elsewhere, and by the felicity of expression which characterizes this part of the work, the most casual reader cannot fail to be impressed alike by the warm acknowledgment of help the Department has received from outside, especially from men with Indian or British experience, and the no less frank acknowledgment of mistakes and failure, as with regard to the use of the plane table in contour surveying (p. 66). The result is that he is the more ready to accept as legitimate and just the pride with which the author records such technical successes of the Department as the "Ceylon process" for printing maps with several colours (pp. 79 and 80), or the tribute quoted (p. 71) to the quality of the local work on the topographical survey, albeit from the Surveyor-General, to the effect that it "will be found to run similar work in the old country (the Ordnance Survey Maps) very close in artistic merit and general excellence." High praise this. And, remembering Aristotle's dictum that "the best judge of a dinner is not the cook but the diner," the reader makes bold to add his general concurrence after inspecting the maps and illustrations reproduced in the 16 plates in the book.

The other technical aspect on which the present reviewer disclaims competence is the vexed problem of the ancient land tenure system which is treated at some length in the first chapter. All he can dare say by way of criticism is that in one or two places the narrative makes difficult, and sometimes even confusing, reading; that there are a few instances of careless writing as on p. 2, where the unwary reader may not suspect how remote were the succeeding ages of Lekammithi and Kitudar from those of the patriarchal gamika and gannähe; and that some of the statements concerning the Dutch period, e.g. "earliest" reference to private surveys (p. 18), "only references" to Thombu compilations in the Colombo disavany (p. 12), etc., would appear somewhat sweeping when the Dutch records are considered in terms of "the petty done, the undone vast." But the author has at the very outset, in the Preface, admitted the complexities and pitfalls which must attend any discussion of the subject and claims no more for his treatment of it than the object of formulating "some general principles which can serve as a basis for criticism and correction." And the need for some discussion of the subject has arisen from the course which he so rightly follows consistently of treating of the work of the Survey Department in the context of wider social needs and demands.

In Dutch times the title plan illustrating a particular piece of land was only an occasional necessity, required far more often in urban than in rural areas. The very first British Governor, North, however, initiated a policy of encouraging undivided ownership, of discouraging a fundamental feature of the old tenurial relationships, and of promoting land improvement. The later part of the first chapter shows not only how each of these three aspects of North's policy created work for the how each of these three aspects of North's policy created work for the how each of these three aspects of North's policy created work for the how each of these three aspects of North's policy created work for the how each of these three aspects of North's policy created work for the...
the fostering of teamwork and cooperation, the stimulus of encouragement and leadership, the attractions of the wilds (not forgetting the exquisite description of the Villu and its tonic effect upon the jaded exile in the arid waste)—all this is treated not as mere embellishment but as contributing to a notable achievement which reached fulfillment (though it did not end in consequence) when in 1917 "the entire island was mapped on the mile-to-an-inch scale and a complete large-scale flat map was made available to officials and the public."

From the work of surveyors engaged on these surveys was initially gathered the information which greatly facilitated two notable public endeavours, for the execution of which two important departments of government—the Irrigation and the Archaeological—have been responsible. It was data collected by surveyors on this task that led to a better appreciation of the skill and the scientific ingenuity applied to the construction of the ancient irrigation works, not only with regard to storage (for that was to some extent made evident by the sheer big-ness of the tanks) but also with regard to the distribution of water and the inter-connections between the reservoirs in the Dry Zone and their relations to their catchments. If in this matter the fact proved in a sense greater than the legend, on the other hand the discovery by these same surveyors of innumerable inscriptions buried in the jungle meant that, as the author neatly puts it, while "the maps were showing the natural features of Ceylon in correct outline, history was being simultaneousslly stripped of many a garbled tradition which had been grafted by flights of fancy" in this connection one cannot refrain from drawing attention to the exciting references to the ruins at Nuwaragala and the remnants of the Kalugal-bemma, which the reviewer fears too many of the readers of this Journal are like him in not having ever seen.

In conclusion, the great merit of this book is that, eschewing copious detail, the author has preferred rather to help the reader to a just appraisal of the work of one of the oldest of our public departments by making him sensible of the variety of the points at which it has touched the life of the modern community—Revenue, The Courts, Economic Development in matters of communications, plantations, irrigation and agriculture, and last but not least Scholarship, both by its initial archaeological finds and by the numerous series of maps of interest to geographer and historian. To these last it is hoped that the second volume of this work will be a notable addition. Grateful for this present volume, the public will look forward with pleasurable anticipation to its sequel.
